This building is two stories high, two bays wide, has a flat roof, and is at the western end of a row of houses. The facade is laid in common bond brick, and the foundation wall is sheathed in white marble.

The doorway, which is located on the right has eight marble steps leading to it. Above the six panelled wooden door is a rectangular transom set below a flat splayed brick lintel. The windows are double hung with 1/1 lights, and have marble sills and flat splayed brick lintels. The wooden cornice which adorns the roofline has one row of small modillions and one row of dentils, and rests above a row of brick corbelling.

Eager Street

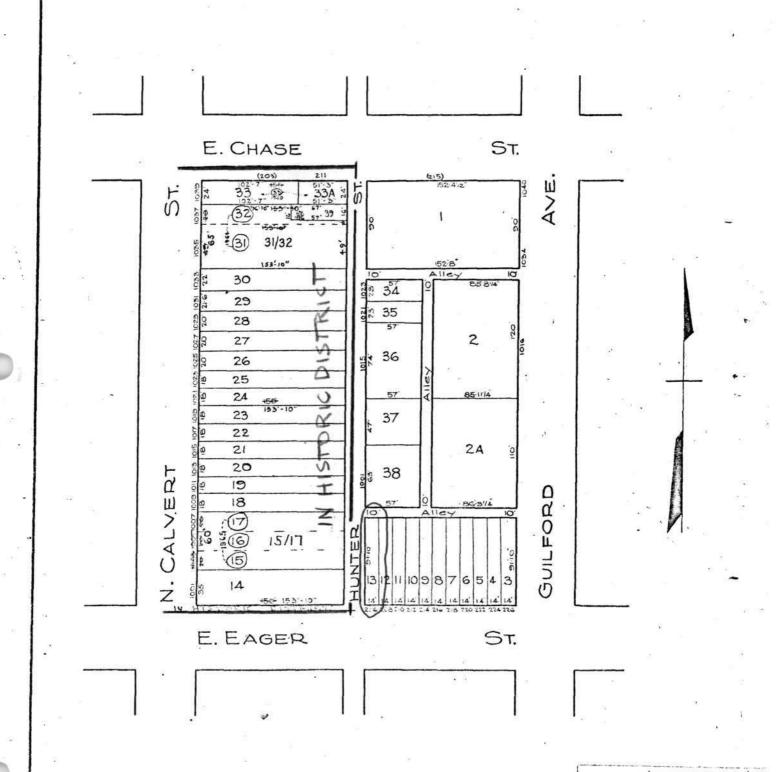

This eager Street row of eleven modest houses in Block 508 provides a refreshing contrast and a bit of quiet relief to the Mount Vernon area. The buildings are interesting despite their ubiquity (nearly identical houses were built in virtually every Baltimore neighborhood between 1880 and 1910), for they are perhaps the most pleasantly sited houses in the area, with the exclusion of those exceptional few which face Mount Vernon and Washington Places.

Perched on the side of a gently sloping hill, the row steps down from Hunter Alley to Guilford Avenue. Each house is set back from Eager Street on an individual hillock, in an arrangement which provides each house with a small, walled, landscaped front yard, the only row of houses in the area so distinguished. Long flights of white marble steps running up the hillocks to each doorway create a streetscape of unusual interest, where siting and some standard Baltimore architectural elements are combined in a unique situation, born of chance.
